10 Swedish Sayings in English

<https://swedishmadeeasy.com/10-swedish-sayings-in-english.html>

Contributed by: Ann-Sofi Holst

Sayings can become very amusing when they are translated literally, and Swedish ones are no exception. Last year, the Twitter hash tag #swedishsayings did exactly this and gained a lot of popularity and laughs, even among people who knew no Swedish at all. The Local published a list of 10 odd sayings a while back, including some commentary about them, and here is the complete list.

Ingen ko på isen – There’s no cow on the ice. “This is a popular saying in Sweden, which quite simply means “Don’t worry”. It remains unknown how often Swedish cattle are milling about on frozen lakes, but it’s no stretch of the imagination to understand that a cow on ice would be definitely worth worrying about.”

Nära skjuter ingen hare – A close shot will never get you the rabbit. ” “Close but no cigar” gets a lot more violent in Swedish (and it has a much nicer ring to it!). The Swedes talk about how a close shot will never get you a hare, and that’s fair enough. In fact, it makes more sense at a glance than the one about the cigar anyway.”

Skägget i brevlådan – Caught with your beard in the letterbox. “While their English-speaking cousins are messing around getting their hands stuck in cookie jars, Swedes are getting their beards caught in letterboxes. Don’t ask what they’re doing with their faces so close to the letterboxes in the first place...”

Det ligger en hund begraven – There’s a dog buried here. “There’s something fishy going on here... There’s nothing fishier than a buried dog, right? Well, that’s what a Swede would say. Perhaps it’s the stench of a buried mutt, perhaps it’s the idea of a missing canine companion, or perhaps it’s just the absurdity of it all, but it’s definitely fishy.”

Att ana ugglor i mossen – Suspecting owls in the bog. “You may think there is nothing fishier than a buried dog, and that’s a perfectly logical assumption. But what about owls in the bog? Yes, those crazy Swedes are at it again. When something strange is afoot, they’ll whisper to each other about those fishy owls and their boggy surroundings.”

Smaken är som baken, delad – Taste is like your bum, divided. “While English speakers sometimes rather crudely compare opinions to arseholes (everyone has got one), Swedes take things one step further. They liken opinions to bottoms as both are often perfectly divided down the middle, not unlike the potato below. As with many opinions, potatoes, and behinds, it’s not always a perfect division.”

Finns det hjärterum så finns det stjärterum – If there’s room in the heart there’s room for the arse. “Nothing can make a guest feel more welcome than talking about their arse, and Swedish proverbs certainly do give a quick aside to a behind (see above). When Swedes are accommodating for extra guests, they’ll often use this beautifully rhyming proverb to welcome them. And their arse.”

Gå som katten kring het gröt – To walk like a cat around hot porridge. “Don’t beat about the bush, an English speaker might warn. But not so in Sweden, here it’s all about cats and porridge. Swedish felines are not world renowned for their aversion to porridge, hot or otherwise, but at least they have a proverb to their name.”

Göra en höna av en fjäder – To make a chicken out of a feather. “We’re all familiar with the idea of making a mountain out of a molehill, but the logic surrounding the idea of making a chicken out of nothing but feathers contains several immediate flaws. But it’s a ticklish idea.”

Köp inte grisen i säcken – Don’t buy the pig while it’s still in the bag. “This proverb warns you off rash decisions. Just like you wouldn’t buy a car before taking it for a spin, Swedes seem to be very particular about their swines, warning each other about the perils of purchasing pouched pigs. Note: Pigs are not usually sold in bags in Sweden.”

Events in Sweden through July & August

Happy Birthday H.R.H. Crown Princess Victoria of Sweden! She is the eldest child of The King and Queen and was born on 14 July 1977.

When the King is unable to perform his duties as head of state, for example as a result of foreign visits, Crown Princess Victoria steps in as sovereign. The Crown Princess also conducts her own official duties and visits. Here are some examples of The Crown Princess' royal engagement:

- The Crown Princess is one of 17 ambassadors in the Sustainable Development Goals Advocacy Group. The group's task is to promote the SDGs in various ways.
- The Crown Princess is especially involved in issues related to crisis and conflict management, aid work, and international peacekeeping activities.
- Readers of the Swedish QX Magazine have voted the Crown Princess as the "Hetero of the Year 2021" in this year's Gay Gala, partly due to the speech the Crown Princess gave at last year's inauguration of Stockholm Pride.

Finland: Reflective reindeer antlers aim to stop accidents

Herders in Lapland are spraying their reindeer with reflective paint to help drivers see them in the dark, it appears.

The special spray is being tested on their fur and antlers to see how it holds up in different weather conditions, Finnish national broadcaster YLE reports.

“The aim is to prevent traffic accidents. The spray is being tested on fur at the moment, but it may be even more effective on the antlers, because they are seen from every side,” says Anne Ollila, chairwoman of the Reindeer Herders Association.

As many as 4,000 reindeer die in traffic accidents every year in Finland, the Finnish Game and Fisheries Research Institute says. Most incidents occur in the dark months of November and December, when roads are prone to becoming icy, the Helsingin Sanomat newspaper reports.

EVA BROWN
DECEMBER 25TH, 1931 - MAY 18TH, 2021
FOREVER IN OUR HEARTS.

Biography

Eva Margareta Brown was born in Sweden, on Christmas 1931. The middle of three sisters, she grew up through the Great Depression and the War, then traveled the world. Among other things, she worked as a pharmacy assistant in Sweden and a nanny in London before embarking on what was intended to be a two-year working tour of the U.S. with 5 of her girlfriends when she was in her 20's.

On that trip, she met Robert Brown in New York at a New Year's Eve party that she almost didn't attend. They fell in love, married, and moved to Canada where Eva gave birth to their twins. The young family soon moved to sunny Southern California where they lived for about 30 years. In the early 1990's, after Bob retired, Eva and Bob moved to Eastern Washington state.

A devoted wife and mother, usually presenting as quiet, modest and unassuming (except with her kids), Eva had a sharp mind and could surprise the unprepared with her quick wit. Eva was multilingual and had a knack for math (displaying a particular penchant for the challenging calculations of astrological chart mapping which she took up in later years, often without using a calculator).

A good cook and disciplined homemaker, she enjoyed hosting friends and family and prepared amazing holiday dinners. She loved her extended family in the U.S. and, although she only made it back to Sweden a few times after coming to the States, she stayed in touch with her beloved family there and was happy when she had the opportunity to host any of them in the States. Eva regularly followed Swedish news and kept up her native language skills with a group of close Swedish girlfriends she made in the States.

Throughout her life, Eva enjoyed being active. Although she is last known to have been on water skis in 1957, as a youth she enjoyed cross-country snow skiing and later was an avid walker. Surviving her beloved Bob, Eva continued living on her own in the Spokane house they loved until late 2018 when she began to require continually supervised care. She then moved to a memory care assisted living residence near Glenn in Portland OR. There she passed peacefully in her sleep on the evening of May 18, 2021.

She was a great mom and we miss her.

Notes from Peggy:

The last two times I spoke with Mom on the phone (just before and after Mother's Day), she said several times, "Tell everyone I love them." If you are receiving this, you are one of her Everyone; please know that she loved you.

Mom chose to be cremated so there will not be a burial service, but as she especially loved serving coffee and cake (after dinner or any time) you will soon be receiving an invite to a virtual coffee-and-cake memorial service to honor her memory.

In lieu of flowers, we would ask that you honor Mom's memory with a donation to the worthy charity of your choice.
